

Teaching Pronunciation Differently (TPD)

is a free online EVO 2018¹ session

TPD is about an effective alternative to the traditional 'listen and repeat' method.

The 'Articulatory Approach' presented in TPD shows students how to make the correct physical movements to successfully pronounce English. This is achieved through discovery and experimentation, with the teacher acting as a coach rather than as a model.

This is an opportunity to radically change your perspective on pronunciation and how to teach it. To register your interest, please email tpd.moderators@gmail.com

To send this flyer to a friend, use this link:
<https://tinyurl.com/ybm7kd24>

The five-week session begins on 14th January 2018

¹ Electronic Village Online is a project that was initiated by TESOL's CALL-IS. Every year it brings together English language educators from around the world to engage in free, collaborative, online professional development sessions.

“Obtaining the right pronunciation from my students without modelling the sound is really like magic to me - at last I feel like I'm turning into a real teacher of English.”

Philippe Hérault (Secondary School teacher, France)

“My ESL students are typically frustrated by the traditional 'listen and repeat' approach to learning pronunciation, and are amazed by the awarenesses they develop using the articulatory approach. It is a pleasure to watch them finally experience success in producing the sounds that have eluded them for so long.”

Mary Cotter (TESOL teacher, New York)

“TPD is transformative for both teacher and student. It's a fundamentally different perspective on pronunciation, which is not only challenging and fun to explore, it also works!”

Carrie Terry (EFL lecturer, UK)